Air strike 3d is an action game that will let you challenge yourself as you play. I was so surprised that I was able to get a full version download in such a short amount of time. And it worked flawlessly in both browsers, you should download and try it out yourself.Q: npm install command to install modules that depend on other modules I want to install node modules in a centralized way so I have made a.npmrc file. I follow the instructions from {"registry": ""} {"_log": "./logs/npm.log"} This works fine for modules that have no dependencies. But when I tried to install modules that depend on other modules, I have tried to use the npm i -S and npm i --save-dev command, however, they don't work. And I don't know why. Does anybody have some idea about it? A: The npm i --save-dev command works as expected on locally installed modules. It adds dependency to package.json and saves it to the package-lock.json. The reason why npm i -S doesn't work, is because it works on packages that have been installed globally or locally, and npm i -S runs the first install operation. More specifically, the first install operation of a package is: If package has a "save-dependencies" field in the package.json, and the field is not false, npm installs the packages that package deps on. Otherwise, npm just installs the package. If you want to install a locally installed package with the dependencies, you can use the --save-dev argument, this will install a package and its deps into the node_modules folder for locally installed modules. The --save-dev argument will be ignored if a package doesn't exist locally. A Catholic priest was removed from the pulpit after saying in a sermon that gay couples tend to be more socially stable than heterosexual couples, a parishioner has said. Fr Philip Orsman, pastor of St Mary's in Hulme, described gays as "disgusting" in a sermon that was recorded and later posted to YouTube. In the video, the priest is heard saying:
